

Early Stuttering Treatment

The Lidcombe Program

The speech pathologist will advise you whether treatment is needed and when it should begin. Clinical trials around the world have supported the use of the Lidcombe Program to treat preschoolers who stutter.

Parents do the Lidcombe Program treatment by gently encouraging children during everyday situations to speak without stuttering, and measuring their stuttering severity each day. It is important that the treatment is done with guidance from a speech pathologist.

The average time until there is little or no stuttering is around four months. However, that is only an average and it may take more or less time than that.

Your speech pathologist will show you how to do the Lidcombe Program and will make sure that you do it correctly. You will visit the speech pathologist at the clinic each week.

The most important part of the treatment is that your child enjoys doing it.

After your child has little or no stuttering, another important part of the Lidcombe Program begins. This is called maintenance. You will visit the speech pathologist occasionally for around one year. During these months the speech pathologist will show you how to do all you can to ensure that stuttering does not re-appear. You will need to continue treatment during the maintenance period, although not as much as before.

The Lidcombe Program treatment guide can be downloaded from the website of the Lidcombe Program Trainers Consortium (see below). This guide is useful to you and your speech pathologist for being sure that the treatment is being done correctly.

As with all health care, a first and important choice is which speech pathologist will show you how to do the Lidcombe Program. Naturally, it is best to see someone who is experienced with this particular treatment. This is something that you might wish to discuss with a speech pathologist you are considering.

The Lidcombe Program Trainers Consortium provides training internationally each year to hundreds of speech pathologists. You can get advice about speech pathologists closest to you who have received this training. Contact the Consortium by emailing the trainer who is closest to you. All Consortium member email addresses are listed at the link below.

The Lidcombe Program
Trainers Consortium

<http://www.lidcombeprogram.org>